Dara Molloy lives on Inis Mor, Aran Islands, Ireland with his wife and four children. Inspired by the Celtic monastic tradition, he has created spiritually based projects on Inis Mor, expressing that tradition in a contemporary setting: hospitality, organic gardening, ecological building, education, publishing and the development of Celtic ceremonies. His recently published book The Globalisation of God: Celtic Christianity's Nemesis looks at early Celtic Christianity's struggles with the Roman Church as a paradigm for the development of contemporary multi-national corporations. His work includes 12 delightfully down to earth poems by his wife, Tess Harper.
